Fort McAllister, which was captured on the 14th inst., by Genl. Sherman, is a very strong earthwork situated on the Ogeechee River, about sixteen miles south of the Ossabaw Sound. This part of the coast of Georgia is of that amphibious character which marks so much of the Southern coast in general—the ravaged and unfinished ends of nature's works, where sea and land keep up a mutual warfare. The ocean lies between them, forming Ossabaw and Ossabaw Islands, forming Ossabaw Sound, and into this estuary flow the Great and Little Ogeechee and the Vernon Rivers. The land, or rather the marsh, on each side of the Ogeechee, is almost a pearl, certainly rising hardly a foot above the level of the river, while at times it is entirely submerged. For miles and miles on every hand there is nothing to be seen but those low and level islands and islets, covered with reeds and rank grass, save where a little vegetation has sprung up in the occasional clumps of trees called "chummocks."

About six miles from the mouth of Ossabaw Sound, near where the Savannah, Albany and Gulf river crosses the Ogeechee, the rebels put in a promontory named Point Genesis, covered by one of those hillocks of "more than ordinary size." Below this, hidden from the river, lies Fort McAllister, an earthwork of immense strength, erected by the rebels during the war; its batteries completely commanded the river.

Fort McAllister, which has just succumbed to an attack from the land side, had previously held defiance to two attacks from our naval forces. The first of these took place nearly two years ago. On the 27th day of January, 1863, the monitor Montauk, commanded by Capt. Worden, bombarded its earthen walls for nearly six hours, without receiving or doing much damage. Each appeared to be invincible against the other. The second and more important attack was made on the 3d of March, 1863. The vessels employed in this engagement were the monitors Montauk, Passaic, Patapsco and Niobrara, and the gunboats Seneca, Wissahickon and Davis, and several smaller gunboats and schooners. This formidable force rained a storm of shot and shell upon the fort for one whole day, with no more damage to the rebels than the dismounting of a gun or two. Late in the afternoon the fleet was withdrawn uninjured, and the vessels dropped down the stream, the rebels coming out on the parapets and cheering a defeat which they had suffered.

Near Fort McAllister the blockade-runner Nashville was destroyed on the 28th day of February, 1863, by the Montauk.

THE DIFFICULTIES ON THE NORTHERN BORDER.

The Secretary of State on the 19th sent a communication to the House, in reply to a resolution directing him, to transmit all correspondence in full in relation to trouble on the northern border. He reports that these difficulties are not merely local, but have arisen mainly out of the attitude of Great Britain towards the United States at the beginning of this civil war. The correspondence is very voluminous, beginning with the commencement of this civil war. It refers the House to the correspondence accompanying the President's messages of 1861, 1862 and 1863. Correspondence is now going on, and will be given by way of supplement, as soon as prepared.

A RICH TING ON Gov. Seward.—It transpires that before the election, Governor Seymour sent a canon to his friends at Watertown, New York, to be fired in honor of his success. It happened that hour till after his defeat, and the parties to whom it was sent refuse to pay the freightage on it. It still lies in the railroad depot, a grim, silent and eloquent commentary on the fullness of copper-head calculations.

AN IMPORTANT RESOLUTION.—Mr. Wilson, of Iowa, has introduced in the House of Representatives, a resolution "declaring that certain States are not entitled to representation in the electoral college. It includes the States of Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Mississippi, Louisiana, Texas, Arkansas, and Tennessee. The resolution has been referred to the Judiciary Committee.

The legislature of Michigan which meets next month, will be called upon to select a United States Senator to fill the vacancy occasioned by the termination of Mr. Howard's term on the 4th of March, 1865. The State Press have very generally commenced a discussion as to who the fortunate successor shall be, some advocating Mr. Howard's re-election, and others urging Gov. Blair as his successor.

Fair Richmond Enquirer states that Gen. Lee, in a letter to Mr. Mills, of Soule's, advocating the arming of negroes, says that Sherman, when he gets to the coast will carry three only long enough to rest and recruit his men, and then take shipping for City Point to get in the spring as a movable column on the rebel lines of communication; and this necessitates a like column on their part.

A TOBACCO CONVENTION.—A noticeable feature of the tobacco convention at the Cooper Institute, a few days since, was that nearly all present, some two thousand, were smoking, doubtless from a patriotic desire to increase the revenues. A suggestion that gentlemen better not smoke, as it might prove "offensive to somebody," brought down the house.

Mrs. CLARA W. FARNHAM, well known as a Philanthropist and author, died in New York on Thursday, at the age of 30. Her last book, "The Era of Woman," to which she devoted about twenty years of her life, is thought to have so exhausted her energies as to have materially shortened her life.

The Boston Advertiser says there is a lady in the vicinity of that city who supported her husband in the only purity of his way and in fact received what she supposed to be his husband. Croxton's Brigade.
[From the Louisville Journal]

We have witnessed many fields of desperate strife during this rebellion. But among all those bloody and sanguinary contests we have never seen anything that could compare with the cool, stubborn and unflinching stand made by the 2d Michigan cavalry, under the command of Col. Smith, on the 30th of November, in the Frenchwood Forest, about four miles from the town of Franklin. This regiment is armed with the Spencer carbine, a seven shooter, regarded as the most effective cavalry arm in the Government service, and is known as a part of the dashingly brigade of General Croxton, of Kentucky.

Along the pike road leading to Franklin it was learned that three brigades of the enemy's cavalry were moving with view of striking the town of Franklin on the left, at the moment that Hood with his entire army, should be engaged in an attack upon our front and right, and it was across this road that the 2d Michigan cavalry, with instructions to hold the enemy in check an hour, formed its line of battle.

The regiment numbered about 450 men, while the force of the enemy could not have been less than seven thousand, of the Texas, Georgia and Louisiana cavalry, under the command of General Forrest, who is recognized as the ablest Confederate cavalry officer in the service.

We were standing upon an elevation, a little to the rear and left of this Michigan regiment, which gave us a full and complete view of the battle. We saw them slide from their saddles and rush forward a few rods to the activity of a gentle slope, that shielded their horses from the fire of the enemy, and here they fell upon their foes, hugging the ground so closely that it was almost impossible for the enemy to see them, while the commander, seated upon a log in close proximity to his cronies, shouting, with his bridle rein strung upon his arm, seemed to be engrossed in trying to light his pipe. Through the woods along their front, as far as the eye could reach, nothing was to be seen but the heavy black columns of the enemy, moving slowly but confidently forward. Presently they halted; when a column of the Texan and Louisiana cavalry, apparently about two thousand strong, swung round by the left, dismounted, and forming in line of battle, came rushing forward, pouring from the Enfield rifles volley after volley, while the woods resounded with the wild scream of the Texan Ranger. Turning our face for a moment to the right, we discovered General Croxton sitting upon a horse a few feet from us, with one leg thrown over the pommel of his saddle looking at the scene. Thinking that he had not seen the heavy line of the enemy that was now moving up, and partially hid from our view by an undulating swell of the ground, we exclaimed, General, those men will be annihilated in ten minutes! Turning his head slowly toward us, and taking us to be a resident of the country, he observed: Don't be alarmed, my Tennessee friend, these are my whitefish boys; you'll hear them speak in a minute or two. He had scarcely finished speaking when Michigan arose to her knees, and, in that prying position, poured into the enemy's sheet of fire, which could be heard from no other arm than the Spencer carbine. For a full minute an incessant stream of fire belched from the muzzles of those carbines, drifting upon the heavy column of the enemy's sleek spray of lead, such as no human power could resist, halting and staggering the advance.

The line wavered for a moment, and then, under a rallying shout, it bounded forward a few feet against the storm of leaden hail; again it halted, broke and fled. For nearly two hours column after column was hurled at the Michigan regiment, and each in turn was drafted back with terrible slaughter. At length there was a pause, silence broken only by the fatal rustling of the forest leaf. In the distance the enemy could be seen dismounting and missing columns for another charge, one that would trample beneath its feet the power that had so long resisted their advance.

The News.

In the dispatches detailing the action of the rebel Congress, it will be seen that the triumphant success of Sherman and Thomas have given the rebels a fit of the blues. Hangman Foot retires to private life in disgust. Before going he said:

"It's all fallen, Savannah is about to fall and the fall of Charleston seems only to be deferred a few days later. Hood's army has already met with a great disaster at Franklin, and in my judgment is fully compromised. Presidential interference is the cause of all that dire mischief, as it was the result of the battle of Murfreesboro and the still more disastrous one of Missionary Ridge. Should Hood's army be destroyed, an event which I fear is but too probable, and Sherman's command come round to this vicinity in ships, which I do not doubt he now intends, what will be the fate of Richmond?"

The Governor General of Canada has offered a reward for the re-arrest of the St. Albans raiders. A special agent of the Postoffice department who left Sherman's army on the 16th reports all well. All persons belonging to Sherman's army, now under Thomas, are ordered to report to their respective commands via New York, immediately.

Read Admiral Farragut will be promoted to the newly created rank of Vice Admiral.

Theodore Tilton, Esq.

One of the best lectures ever delivered in this city, was listened to by a small audience last evening, at the Court Room, Theodore Tilton, Esq., Editor of the New York Independent, was the speaker, and his subject was "the state of the country." Mr. T. is a young man of marked personal appearance, full six feet high, rather slender, and possessing a voice of deep musical cadence and volume. He said he did not visit Janesville upon any body's invitation, or because he desired to come, but somehow it had got into the newspapers that he would speak here and so he came. He said that while he did not shut his eyes to the terrible burdens and sacrifices of this war, he should take a hopeful view of the condition of the country at the present time. He was hopeful because we now had the right generals in the field, the right President in the White House, and the portals of the Supreme Court Room that have been darkened by a Tax, were now gilded by a "Crown!"

He said there were three parties in this struggle—God, the white man, and the black man; and the reason why we had met with such ill success in the first of the war, was because we refused to work with the black man, and God refused to work without him. He noticed the rapid progress which the anti-slavery sentiment had made during the last four years.

When Abraham Lincoln was inaugurated he volunteered to say that slavery should be preserved if he could do it; but now, before his first term is closed he declares that if the American people wish to return to slavery any person made free by his Emancipation Proclamation, they must choose some other instrument besides him. He was hopeful of the country because the people had determined to bury slavery forever out of sight. He closed by an eloquent appeal in behalf of the Freedmen's Fair now being held in Chicago. Speaking of the prejudices against color, he said he once read in the London Times an advertisement made as short as possible in order to save cost and space. It ran thus:

"WANTED—Two sisters want washing." Both North and South needed washing in order to get rid of their prejudice against color.

The lecture was interspersed throughout with many brilliant illustrations and embellished by quaint and scholarly comparisons that made it exceedingly interesting to his audience.

HOGG'S TUNNEL.—From eight to nine hundred men are constantly at work on the Hogg Tunnel. The dam which is building across the Bearfield river on the east side of the mountain in order to furnish power to keep the tunnel supplied with pure air, will cost $100,000.

BOSTON may be the centre of civilization, but they had morals in it, as well as in the less pretentious parts of Christendom. One evening recently, twenty-two common drift-kards were arrested by the police, in one police district, and eighteen of them were women!

JAS G. SWINSON writes from Washington in favor of women clerks in the departments. She says they will not only not ask for an increase of salary, but will do the work and do it well, for less than is now paid!

One of the rebel officers prisoners at Johnson's Island has given birth to a "bouncing boy." So says the Sunday Register. The Register informs us that the officer is undoubtedly a woman."

Turning our face for a moment to the right, we discovered General Croton sitting upon his horse a foot from us, with one leg thrown over the pommel of his saddle looking at the scene. Thinking that he had not seen the heavy line of the enemy that was now moving up, and partially hid from our view by an undulating swell of the ground, we exclaimed, General, those men will be annihilated in ten minutes! Turning his head slowly toward us, and taking us to be a resident of the country, he observed: Don't be alarmed my Tennessee friend, those are my white boys; you'll hear them speak in a minute or two. He had scarcely finished speaking when Michigan arose to her knees, and, in that praying position, poured into the enemy a sheet of fire, which could be heard from no other than the Spencer carbine. For a full minute an incessant stream of fire belched from the muzzles of those carbines, drifting upon the hairy column of the enemy a scaly spray of lead, such as no human power could resist, hailing and staggering the advance.

The line wavered for a moment, and then, under a rallying shout, it bounded forward a few feet against the storm of leaden hail; again it haltered, broke and fled. For nearly two hours column after column was hurled at the Michigan regiment, and each in its turn was driven back with terrible slaughter. At length there was a pause, silence broken only by the shrill rustling of the forest leaf. In the distance the enemy could be seen dismounting and massing columns for another charge, one that would trample beneath its feet the power that had so long resisted their advance.

We turned to point them out to General Croton, but he was gone. Onward came that black mass of the enemy, flaunting its banners, with undevoted desperation, and again did Michigan empty her carbines. Then came the ringing shout of her commander, Up, Michigan, right about, double quick, mount! Now was the moment of peril—the moment of danger. Not less than four thousand rifles were ready to sweep away the line when it rose from its leathen couch, but at the very instant that the command was given to fall back, the Eighth Iowa cavalry, under the command of Duri, dashed through a thicket and struck the enemy upon the right flank with an onrushing fire that rolled it up into a mass of confusion. Amazed and bewildered, the rebels directed their glance for a moment in the direction of this unexpected attack, and in that moment, Michigan was in the saddle, and all was safe.

ALICE REDWOOD'S GHOST.

BY LEWIS WALTER.

"People make their own superstitions."

Death of William L. Dayton.

Private letters received give the particulars of the death of the Hon. Mr. Dayton. He left his house in perfect health to call upon a lady at the Hotel Debonair. Soon after entering her room he was seized with a fit of convulsions and laid down mortally ill. He appeared to fall asleep and the last words of Paul were "I will call a physician." On examination he was found dead in the position in which he had lain down.

Mr. Dayton was a native and citizen of New Jersey, and was born in 1807. He at various times held important and honorable positions of trust and usefulness, all of which he filled with credit and honor. In 1832 he was a Judge on the New Jersey State Supreme Bench. In 1837 took his seat in the United States Senate, where he remained until 1851. Being one of the most influential and honorable members of that body, and distinguishing himself as a Free Soil Whig, his opposition to slavery in the Territories and the Southern State of California, his advocacy of the abolition of slavery in the District of Columbia, and his bold denunciation of the Pugnacious Slaveholders, made him a friend and adviser of President Taylor. In 1856 he was nominated, for the Vice Presidency of the United States, on the ticket with Fremont, by the Republican National Convention. In 1857 he was appointed Attorney General of the State of New Jersey, which position he resigned in 1860, to accept that of Minister to Paris, at the hands of Mr. Lincoln's Administration.

The Dutch Gap Canal is thus described: The Gap is about 300 feet long and 80 feet deep. Each side is washed by the James. By this cutting we save at least 7 miles, and avoid the "Bend," so called; and the rebel batteries at the same time. The James already flows into one half of the cutting, and the portion nearly complete is a narrow ridge. The walls of cast to be blown out to the whole depth of the cutting, from the face to the bottom of the cut, 80 feet deep and about 80 feet wide. The depth of water in the canal will be about 15 or 20 feet. The wall, as above, is cut on each side, nearly two-thirds down, and where place, a hole has been cut right through. About 100 men (colored soldiers) were at work. We expect every hour to hear the explosion which shall open the Gap. Then will commence the jaws of War.

At a meeting of the Fenian Brotherhood at Jersey City, Friday night, one of the speakers said fifty thousand Fenians were ready to march into Canada in case of trouble between America and England. Resolutions were passed repudiating and repelling all interference with their action as American citizens, and denouncing the conduct of the priest who recently informed to break up a Fenian meeting.

A Washington paper says the reason for the resignation of Maj. Gen. Crittenton and staff is that the Government offered him a command inadequate to his rank in the Army of the Potomac, placing him in a subordinate position to junior officers. The resignation has been accepted.

EMIGRATION TO AMERICA.—Accounts from Mecklenburg, Germany, state that an emigration is now going on from the Duchy to America, and that the landholders are looking forward with dismay to the moment when they will have no hands to cultivate their estates.

ADMIRAL FARRAGUT.—Of course every body feels interested in the personal appearance of the hero of New Orleans and Mobile. In the account of his reception in New York the Tribune says:

In personal appearance Admiral Farragut would suggest to the minds of the many that Sir Charles Oldis' "admirable novel of 'The Two Admirals.' Hale, hearty, and of a color sure to impress, mold, the Hero of New Orleans and Mobile Bay is apparently between fifty and sixty years of age. He looks as if he had always loved a joke, with the sprightliness of a boy, and his manner is so perfectly frank and unassuming that it is no wonder that he is so loved by his officers and men.

AMOUNT OF LABOR EXPENDED IN MILITARY OPERATIONS.—We have heard of the military engine christened "Swamp Angel." Colonel Serett who superintended the construction on which it was mounted, said it required over ten thousand days' work and exposure to constant fire from numerous rebel batteries as soon as the rebels appeared above the grass. It stands on the very softest of mud, twenty-two feet deep, so soft that a man will sink into it, out of sight if he attempts to walk on it. Four thousand logs, filled with sand, were carried more than two miles, and three hundred large logs and pieces of timber more than ten miles, to make the battery. The miles and a half of bridges across the marsh had to be built to get to and from the batteries.

FATE OF A SPY.—The Troy Times says that Professor Lockett, formerly of St. Louis, and but a few years since leader of the Universal church, was detected as a rebel spy in the service of Gen. Beauregard, receiving five hundred dollars per month in greenbacks. He was arrested within the lines of the army of the Confederates, shortly after the battle of Shiloh, and while in the act of making plans of our fortifications, guns and magazines, in the vicinity. Upon being searched, proofs of all our fortifications and descriptions of our guns and magazines, were found in his stockings. He was put under guard to await trial, and while attempting to escape quite recently, he was shot dead by the sentinel.

DARWIN, in one of his entertaining volumes, mentions a curious instance of a change of instinct. Some birds carried to Barbadoes from the Western Islands could not return to their old country house, but they found the teacher of their old home, and built the nest of their old house, with her Puerto Rican lover, the great wretch of her highland country, and built this house with her husband. But her parents' curse with her penalty pursued her. She never threw most of her children died young; her husband fell in a duel; (strange ending for a disciple of Cromwell!) she followed them, dying of slow decline in this very room, which had been haunted by her spirit ever since. Night after night, at a certain period of the year, in which her heavy misfortunes had failed, or her greatest error committed, she was said to walk wearily up and down the long apartment, wringing her white hands, and mourning with hue and gesture that unforgiven sin. None of the present race of cool, unfeeling Carters had been admitted to the sight of this aristocratic spectre; but an old family servant who nursed Alice in her childhood, was quite certain of the fact, and had known many reliable and respectable persons who had seen it twice without number. One infant auditor she had, who heard, believing, and had never grown out of the fear of ghostly Lady Macduff.

"One can't conceive everything," faltered she at last.

"But one needn't be a credulous fool," returned the Colonel, severely, without any idea that he was rebuking his young relative's secret weakness, but merely sustaining an argument. He followed up the acrimonial blow by a long lecture on silly and unfeudal fancies, which she groaned in sweet submission silence, as she recited the iron dictum of his. She came twice a year to the family reunion at Carter Hall, and despite of her "temper," her visitors, her weakness and cowardice, for which her very youngest cousin ridiculed and corrected her, made friendly whenever she came. Without her presence Christmas merrymakings would have been but dull ceremonies, and midsummer vapors a great waste. Thus it was said by the younger children, and thus it seemed to Paul.

For long pause followed the closing of the Colonel's oration, which was broken by the shrill voice of a young cousin, belonging to the band of "Julius' scribbles," who spared nobody. "Cousin Alice" is afraid of ghosts!" he announced; and then dead silence fell.

Victoria, a tall, handsome girl of twenty, smiled across the table at the blushing girl, and a slim miss of sixteen, the prize scholar of a neighboring academy, looked up from her Latin composition in several surprise. Paul lifted his fine eyes from his book, and nodded gravely at the offerer, in a way that indicated future penitence and poorness.

"Non sense!" cried the Colonel, darting his inquiring look at his niece.

"Oh, no," stammered she, faintly, "only so many people say so. It's not true, of course—that's I suppose—and she has been told."

Paul paid no heed to the query, and accompanied her to her chamber, when they did not share it, but had judiciously refrained to sit during her conference with Paul, whose partiality was well known among the older cousins. It was too late to hope they would return; they were probably both asleep by this time; and drawing a deep breath of dread and apprehension, Alice walked hurriedly down the long room.

There was nothing ghostly in its appearance now; a bright fire sparkled in the wide chimney, its glow reflected on the marble mantel and hearth, and in the great mirror that hung above—a lamp burned brilliantly on the handsome carpet-table; the dark old mahogany furniture was rubbed and polished till it too reflected all manner of little shining lights. The chairs and sofas were covered with modern stuffs, in pretty and tasteful contrast to their plain shapes and ornaments; the carpet also was modern, of rich colors and texture, very soft and comfortable to the touch. A Turkey rug lay before the fire-place, and heavy green curtains draped the tall windows, and the high, old-fashioned "canopy" bedstead; but they were all quite new, and of very different style and material from those that had been taken away, redolent to Alice's fancy of associations with the ghost. Fanciful trifles, of her own making or presenting, many of them, and gaily bound "keepsakes" and her publications covered the shelves and tables, and made the room seem a little more humbly habitable. The article is invaluable to mothers."

Here, becoming conscious, from Paul's malicious look, of the bad example he was setting the children in this disreputable way, the Colonel suddenly stopped to order the juniors to bed, and then he and Paul fell upon the argument, bawling and tooting, as the vulgar say.

"Yes I do," interposed the unyielding authority.

None of the present race of cool, inured young Carters had been admitted to the sight of this aristocratic spectre; but an old family servant, who nursed Alice, in her childhood, was quite certain of the fact, and had known many reliable and respectable persons who had seen it times without number. One infant auditor she had, who heard believing, and had never grown out of the fear of ghostly Lady Maudlin.

Or there was the legend which tradition disputed with this of a certain Dame Marjory, whose ruling passion was avarice, and who had hidden treasures to a great amount somewhere within the limits of the guest chamber, which she still "walked" to watch. Could she but be addressed by a human voice, she must answer and tell the secret of their concealment, which she died without revealing; and many a dissipated young Carter had hidden himself in the West Room, with sword and Bible, to surprise the phantom's guard and Bible, and restore her boards to general circulation. But no success had apparently attended these desperate attempts, the miserly apparition was supposed to keep its vigil yet, and Alice was quite sure that should it appear to her, she would die of fright before she remembered to ask after the treasures.

She gazed fearfully around the room as soon as she found herself alone in it, and trembled to think what shadowy company she might have locked in with her. Virginia and Mittie had always before accompanied her to her chamber, when they did not share it, but had judiciously retired to-night during her conference with Paul, whose partiality was well known among the elder cousins. It was too late to hope they would return; they were probably both asleep by this time; and drawing a deep breath of dread and apprehension, Alice walked hurriedly down the long room.

There was nothing ghostly in its appearance now; a bright fire sparkled in the wide chimney, its glow reflected on the marble mantel and hearth, and in the great mirror that hung above—a lamp burned brilliantly on the handsome center-table, the dark old mahogany furniture was rubbed and polished till it too reflected all manner of little shining lights.

The chairs and sofas were covered with modern stuffs in pretty and tasteful contrast to their quaint shapes and ornaments; the carpet also was modern, of rich colors and texture, very soft and comfortable to the feet. A Turkey rug lay before the fire-place, and heavy green curtains draped the tall windows, and the high, old-fashioned "canopy" bedstead; but they were all quite new, and of very different style and material from those that had been taken away, evident to Alice's fancy of association with the ghost. Fanciful trifles, of her own making or presenting, many of them, and gaily-bound "keep-sakes," and late publications covered the shelves and tables, and made the room seem a little more humanly habitable.

Post Mortister

from the New York Times
Fort McAllister, which was captured on the 14th inst., by Genl Sherman, is a very strong earthwork situated on the Ogeechee River, about sixteen miles south of the Ossabaw Sound. This part of the coast of Georgia is of that amphitheater character which marks so much of the Southern coast in general—the ravaged and unfinished ends of nature's web, where sea and land keep up a mutual warfare. The ocean breaks between Great Wassaw and Ossabaw Islands, forming Ossabaw Sound and the Great Ogeechee and the Vernon Rivers. The shore, or rather, the marsh, on each side of the Ogeechee, is almost a débarcadère, certainly rising hardly a foot above the level of the river, while at times it is entirely submerged. For miles and miles on every hand there is nothing to be seen but these low and level islands and islets, covered with reeds and rank grasses, save where a slender vegetation has pushed up occasional clumps of trees called "Junipers."

About six miles from the mouth of Ossabaw Sound, near where the Savannah, Albany and Gulf river crosses the Ogeechee, there rises prominently a promontory named Point Genesis, covered by one of these hummocks of more than ordinary size. From this hidden from the river, lies Fort McAllister, an earthwork of immense strength, erected by the rebels, certainly in the winter. Its batteries completely commanded the river.

Fort McAllister, which has just succumbed to an attack from the land side, had previously bid defiance to two attacks from our naval forces. The first of these took place nearly two years ago. On the 27th day of January, 1863, the monitor Montauk, commanded by Capt. Warden, bombarded its earthen walls for nearly six hours, without receiving or doing much damage. Each appeared to be invincible against the shell. The second and more important attack was made on the 3d of March, 1863. The vessels employed in this engagement were the monitors Montauk, Passaic, Patapsco and Nahant, and the gunboats Seneca, Wissahickon and Davis, and several mortar schooners. This formidable force raised a storm of shot and shell upon the fort, for one whole day, with no more damage to the rebels than the dismounting of a gun or two. Late in the afternoon the fleet was withdrawn uninjured, and the vessels dropped down the stream, the rebels coming out on the parapets and cheering a deafening adieu.

Near Fort McAllister, the blockade runner Nashville was destroyed on the 28th day of February, 1863, by the Monitor.
